HYDROGRAPHICAL NOTICE.
(No. 16.)

ON and after the 5th day of December, 1864, a fixed White Light, placed at an elevation of seventy feet above the mean level of the sea, will be exhibited from the King-Toan Beacon on the South Bank of the Yang-tze-kiang. It should be visible in clear weather at a distance of 5 or 6 miles.

The same building will display a Red Light at an elevation of 30 feet above the mean level of the sea. This light is intended to keep vessels clear of the dangerous spit that has formed off the Beacon, and it will not be visible from a ship's deck 15 feet above the sea until she is in 18 feet (low water spring tides).

The Beacon is painted red and white chequered, and is surmounted by a bright brass ball.

The North-China Herald.

IMPARTIAL, NOT NEUTRAL.

SHANGHAI, SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1865.

THE closure of the Custom House for the New Year holidays prevents us from publishing the Produce Returns in this day's Herald.

THE day appointed for closing the gambling houses has passed, and with it the season of prophecy. The pleasing task of maintaining our neighbours' integrity of purpose against the indications of COMMON SENSE has become impossible, and the disagreeable duty remains of exposing the inconvenience of the position in which they have placed themselves. When penning the remarks which, as a correspondent has suggested, were calculated to cast doubt on our discretion, we were not ignorant that an intention of opposing the wish of the Taotai was imputed to the French authorities; but we trusted that if they indeed entertained it, an exposition of the invidious light in which such conduct could not fail to be regarded, would impel them to abandon it. The hope has, however, been disappointed. The French Council have placed themselves in opposition to the "collective wish of all the authorities, native and foreign, at Shanghai," they have shown an intention "alone to foster the vice" of gambling, and have proved themselves capable of "frustrating the laudable efforts" of the foreign consuls to suppress this crying evil. It remains only for us to place this conduct in its proper light, in the hope that a brief statement of the facts may lend weight to the appeal which has, we believe, been made through the highest native authority, to His Imperial French Majesty's minister at Peking. The idea of closing gambling houses was first suggested to the Taotai by the proposal of the English Municipal Council to impose on them and other houses of entertainment, a tax which our neighbours, with their habitual energy, had for some time been levying, without that permission from the local authorities which the English thought it right to obtain. From a disinclination to accord to vice the apparent sanction implied by taxation, His Excellency withheld his consent; but shortly afterwards proposed a scheme for entirely suppressing these establishments, which was unanimously approved by a meeting of foreign consuls from which M. Godeaux only was absent. It was still hoped that this absence was accidental, that when the time came he would testify a cordial acquiescence in the wishes of his colleagues; and under this impression the joint Municipal Council which represents the interests of the English and American settlements, promised to close all gambling houses within their jurisdiction on the day appointed by the Taotai. This promise was duly performed, and now not one remains open on either side of the Soochow creek. In the French settlement only are these establishments in full play; to this favoured quarter are invited the profligate and criminal among the enormous native population of Shanghai. Here, entertainment is provided for them and their favorite vice encouraged. Here burglars may still find means to dissipate their ill gotten money, as disreputably as it was acquired; and within the protecting walls of the congenial "hell," may securely plot new crimes. The reputation of the individuals composing the Council will not be raised either individually or collectively by the course they have seen fit to adopt; but they have preserved a revenue of Tls. 30,000 which appears, in their eyes, to possess a far higher value than a reputation for justice and consideration in their dealings with the people on where territory they, as well as ourselves, are residing. We are not sure whether the Council is composed of the same members who so coolly ignored the agreement entered into by M. Maubousin with the late Taotai, that a tax of 8 per cent on rentals of Chinese houses on the French concession should be handed over to the local government, or whether the gentlemen at present constituting it are merely emulating the reputation acquired by their predecessors. In either case they may rest assured that their efforts are not in vain, and that, in the estimation of foreigners as well as natives, their official conduct is duly appreciated. Of the unfavourable position in which the English and American settlements are placed by the continued taxation of gambling houses in the French concession, we say nothing; because we are convinced that if the authority of H.I.M. Consul is insufficient, that of the Minister at least will be brought to bear, to overrule a determination so little creditable to the authors. He, at least, can hardly fail to see the incongruity of the spectacle afforded by representatives of a nation which claims to the most highly civilised in the world, fostering a vice which the very Chinese are endeavouring to suppress. In the meantime, we congratulate these gentlemen on having constituted their settlement a focus of vice, by alone encouraging establishments which experience has proved to be the resort of thieves and incentives to crime.

RETROSPECT OF EVENTS IN THE NORTH OF CHINA DURING THE YEAR 1864.

Shanghai. THE preternatural activity which distinguished the conduct of trade in Shanghai during the years 1861 to 1863, and the excitement caused by the universal speculation in land, received a check in the commencement of last year by the fall of Soochow, and consequent migration of Chinese from the limits of the foreign settlements on the Wongpoo. So long as the neighborhood of the foreign consulates was the only spot where absolute security could be enjoyed, native merchants were glad to crowd into Shanghai, and bring with them all the requirements incident to the presence of an enormous population. Then land and houses began to assume a fabulous value. The city of refuge, as Shanghai was considered, overflowed with wealth, the strong rooms of the merchants stood open to receive a constant stream of sycee, and land speculators, some of whom had made their first investment with borrowed capital, clothed themselves in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. Happy they who seized the auspicious moment, and shifted the responsibility of landed possessions to shoulders other than their own before the crash came. In spite of the confident assurances of interested prophets that the capture of Soochow would have no more effect in emptying Shanghai than had the capture of Quinsan or Tautsang, no sooner was it known that the gates of the provincial capital stood open, than the rich and the poor, the merchant and the scholar, the halt and maimed as well as the stout and hale, packed up their moveables and repaired to their former dwellings in Soochow, or to the heaps of ruins by which those dwellings were represented. A striking change fell immediately on the complexion of land speculation. No longer were eager purchasers to be found, each holder was anxious to "sell a bargain," building operations were suddenly stopped, and reeds and long grass commenced to grow in profusion on the lower floors of the dwellings occupied a month before by crowds of industrious natives. So affairs stand at present. Long lines of wooden tenements stand forlornly exposed to every blast, to the decomposing action of the elements, and to the depredations of beggars. We need not expect to see Shanghai re-toned to its former position as the "El Dorado of the East" until another rebellion compels the peaceable traders to seek a refuge from the ravages of savage hordes, or until, which is no less likely, Shanghai is subjected to a new form of government by which security will be afforded to native residents against the squeezes of rapacious mandarins. When the restoration of peace to the province of Keangsu enabled the traders and others to return to Soochow, the breaking up of those associations which had formed themselves around life in Shanghai can hardly have produced a pang in the sensitive breasts of the returning pilgrims. The paternal government under which they found themselves, the impossibility of doing as they liked, of being as dirty as nature intended them to be, of shouting in the streets, of forming cess pools before each door, of firing crackers and tom-tom-ing in the middle of the night, of periodically taking the gods for an airing accompanied by fifes, gongs, drums and clanking chains,—all the absurd limits which the Municipal Council assigned to the legitimate enjoyments of the Chinese must have seriously interfered with their comfort, and led them to look forward anxiously to the happy day when a benign heaven would restore them to their filth, disease and general noisomeness. The auspicious day did arrive, and they did not delay long to take advantage of it. Those men who have returned to Soochow have learned nothing by their long residence in Shanghai. Their dwellings or such temporary residences as they have knocked up are as dirty and unhealthy as the most ignorant Chinaman could desire, and not a trace of improvement in any particular can be noticed. Indeed the certain escape from troublesome Municipal regulations was one most powerful motive in inducing the exodus from Shanghai, and this fact is thrown into a still stronger light by a petition addressed to Li Futai by the principal residents in Soochow at the time when the question of throwing the provincial city open to foreigners was pending. This petition set forth that not only would the concession thus made to the Western strangers weaken the hands of the native rulers, but that so soon as the capital should be invaded by foreigners, the irksome regulations which were in force at Shanghai would be introduced to the serious discomfort of every native. From this we may form a judgment as to the effect which residence in Shanghai, in contact with all the elements of European civilisation, has had upon the mercantile men and officials who sought a temporary shelter within our limits. The Chinese are, without a solitary exception, of the dirt dirty. They appear to be so constituted as to be utterly unable to improve in moral, social or physical science—they seem even incapable of forming a mental comparison between Eastern or Western habits and manners, or if they do form such a comparison, they are so blinded by ignorance and self conceit as to assign the palm of merit to their own institutions.

However this may be, the fact remains that so soon as the pacification of the province rendered residence at Soochow safe, the thousands of natives who thronged the streets of the foreign settlements at Shanghai shook off the enforced yoke of cleanliness and municipal ordinances, and hastened back to dirt, liberty and Soochow. The effect on the value of land was immediately manifest, and but little expectation can at present be entertained of any rapid rise in the value of real property in the settlements. We may now, therefore, hope that the ardour of speculation having disappeared, mercantile transactions of a legitimate character will conduct more surely, although perhaps with less celerity, to the acquisition of fortune. The year which has just closed has witnessed but few additions to the number of public companies, so many of which were started during 1863. Those however which survive—the Dock and Wharf Companies, &c., are in conditions more or less flourishing. We have already on two or three occasions alluded to the re-establishment of the North China Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society. After having lain for three years in forgetfulness, a few men interested in Asiatic research re-organised the local branch and carried it successfully over a year of its new existence. The first difficulties thus overcome, there is every reason to believe that a long and prosperous course is open before it. The Journal of 1864, laid on the table at the last general meeting, contains many papers of interest, and the contributions already promised towards the Transactions for 1865 will, we imagine, secure a valuable volume at the end of this year. The officers of the society for the current year are as follow:—

Sir HARRY S. PARKES, K.C.B., President.
JAMES HENDERSON, Esq., M.D. } Vice Presidents.
GEO. F. SEWARD, Esq., }
C. T. JONES, Esq., Local Secretary.
JAS. JOHNSTON, Esq., M.D., Corresponding Secretary.

F. CARNIE, Esq., Treasurer.
Rev. C. H. BUTCHER, M.A.
Rev. F. R. MICHELL, B.A.
C. ALABASTER, Esq. } Councillors.
T. DICK, Esq.
J. THORNE, Esq.
T. W. KINGSMILL, Esq.

With this staff of officers the well being of the branch society for the ensuing twelve months is ensured, and we doubt not that at the commencement of 1866, the society's affairs will be handed over in a state of the utmost prosperity to a new Council. The officers and members have indeed assumed a responsibility which we trust they will fully understand. They have claimed the position of the only recognised body whose researches are devoted to the elucidation of the mysteries of Chinese institutions. They have a sacred trust to fulfil—the enlightenment of their contemporaries and of posterity through the many difficulties which beset the path of explorers in the China field. At the same time the labors of the Debating Society will prove of almost equal benefit by training the embryo orators of the settlement, and enabling them to throw their ideas into the most useful and attractive shapes. Since the opening of the Debating Society's session, there have been several well sustained discussions in which the rights and wrongs of various important questions have been impartially laid before the members of the society. To both of these local institutions we are likely to owe much—to the one by the collection of valuable information—to the other by giving practice in the assimilation of ideas. While speaking of the provision made for the intellectual development of the residents in the foreign settlements, we must not overlook the recent arrival of an English Chaplain, who not having his attention constantly diverted by other pursuits, will be able to devote himself to the important work prepared for him. Foremost amongst the objects which are set before him is the erection of a new church to replace the incommodious building in which Divine Service is at present conducted. We are confident that the Chaplain, both as a resident in Shanghai and as spiritual director of a large section of the community, is most anxious to see a tasteful edifice dedicated to the worship of God, and in his wish the foreign settlers should, to a man, sympathise. Before the year 1867 shall open upon us or upon our successors, we trust therefore that a building worthy of the taste and of the wealth of Shanghai will have taken the place of the barn in which the religiously disposed now Sunday after Sunday worship. In Free Masonry the settlements have made rapid strides, no less than three lodges having been established during the year 1864. The Ancient Landmark Lodge, under the American Constitution, is still ruled by its first master—W. Br Chas. E. Hill; the Tuscan, under the English Constitution, is in the second year of its existence, and is ruled by W. Br. H. A. Sidford, while the Cosmopolitan, which hails from the Grand Lodge of Scotland is governed by R. W. Br. Chas. M. Donaldson. The older Lodges are ruled respectively by Br. A. F. Heard (W. M. Sussex) and Br. John Nutt (W. M. Northern). The "Club" deserves especial notice, as, although the idea of establishing it was long since conceived, the execution was so frequently postponed that the smaller ports on the Yangtsze and in Japan possessed this inestimable advantage long before the model settlement opened the doors of the picturesque structure which adorns the Southern extremity of the English bund. Scoffers have been heard to class the architecture of this imposing edifice as "the composite disorder," as the "true debased and carpenteresque style" &c., but "the Club" is an institution long required in Shanghai, and is likely to add materially to the comfort of the unmarried men and occasional visitors to the port. Such are the social advances which we have made in Shanghai during the year which has just closed, and the rational enjoyment of the entire community has been considerably increased by those who have labored to attain the objects which we have thus briefly mentioned.

The full returns of the Import and Export Trade of Shanghai and the other Northern ports have not yet been published. From those, however, which have come to our notice, we gather that in the Import of Opium there has been a falling off of Malwa to the number of 9,639 chests for re-export, and of 5,123 chests for local consumption. In Patna and Benares for re-export there has been an increase of 1,543 chests, and for local consumption, of 2,198 chests. In exports, Tea shews a diminution, in Black of 2,440,473 lbs., and in Green of 1,739,727 lbs. In Silk, including China and Japan, there is a falling off of 11,416 bales, while the export of Cotton for 1864 was less than the export of the same staple during 1863 by 44,566 picals. We have not yet received the return of shipping for last year, but in this also, there will no doubt be a similar diminution for 1864. Meanwhile the number of mercantile houses in Shanghai has largely increased, and as a natural consequence failures amongst the smaller establishments have not been infrequent. Next year will it is to be hoped, witness a reaction after the present dulness, and bring Shanghai to something like its former mercantile greatness.

The migration of the Chinese, while it produced lamentable effects on the value of landed property, brought about an immediate and most gratifying alteration in the rate of mortality in the foreign settlements. During the years when the foreign limits were crowded by natives each summer brought with it the scourge of Cholera which swept away day after day a large proportion of the European residents. Last year, however, when the thinning of the population enabled the Municipal Council to keep the settlements in a state of comparative purity, the number of cholera cases sank to a minimum, while the fatal instances could almost always be traced to some cause other than the presence of an epidemic poison. We are justified, therefore, in expecting that so long as the settlements remain sparsely populated by Chinese, the European settlers will suffer but little from epidemics. Thus Shanghai may eventually regain its renown as a sanitarium for the South of China.

Conclusion. We have in the foregoing Retrospect touched briefly on most of the points which during the past year engaged public attention. We trust that in thus reviving the recollections of 1864, we have caused pleasant memories to rise in the breasts of most of our readers, and have induced those who are compelled to look back on positive misfortunes or on opportunities lost to take courage and boldly attack the difficulties, while they seize the chances, which this year may throw in their way.

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK

A SUMMARY of events during the past fortnight implies a summary of Consular cases, for little else of interest has occurred in the settlement. A full report of the case in which Somerville, Primrose & Co. were plaintiffs, and Fletcher & Co. defendants, was published in our last issue; a copy of the judgment since delivered will be found in another column. For the benefit of readers at the outports, we to-day reproduce a report of a case in which the owners of the ship Her Majesty sued Messrs. Dadabhoy & Co. for breach of a charter-party, which the Court decided remained intact. Our readers will, we think, agree with a remark by the Counsel for the defendants, that the case should not have been brought into Court.

A series of games has taken place between the men of the Belooch regiment, now quartered here, and the tars of H. M. S.S. Scylla and Rattler.

From Hankow we learn that the Mahomedan rebels who, some weeks ago, captured the city of Kai-tung in the Honan province, display such formidable strength that Tseng Kuo-fan has detached a picked force to the borders of Anhwei to guard against possible advance in that direction.

NAGASAKI letters report the destruction by fire of Messrs. Maltby & Co.'s tea-firing godown. During a recent cruise in the Inland Sea, H.M.S. Argus found ten Japanese steamers laden with troops destined to attack Choosin, and carry out the sentence of degradation passed against him by the Mikado.

From YOKOHAMA, no intelligence worthy of record has reached us.

THE AUTOGRAPHIC DEPOSITION OF CHUNG-WANG, THE FAITHFUL KING, AT HIS TRIAL AFTER THE CAPTURE OF NANKING.

The disasters at Soochow and Changchow were occasioned by the mischief of the foreign devils in the pay of Li Futai, who had engaged them to take my cities. The sight of money made the devils reckless of their lives, and Li Futai, knowing that I was not in the city (of Soochow), availed himself of my absence to attack it. Had I not been compelled to come to the heavenly capital and to cross over the river, he (Li) would have found it impossible to take the city. I really had no desire to come to the capital and my words to the Tienwang (when there) were, "the capital cannot be held. General Tsêng has securely besieged the place, the city is deficient in daily necessaries, and outside there is no prospect of any rescue, let them have the city and retire elsewhere." The Tienwang was in great wrath and severely reproved me, I was obliged therefore to kneel before him and again enter into matters, continuing my advice with "if you will not assent to my proposal, the lives of the whole city will be endangered; General Tsêng, in the capture of your Yu-hua-tai, has made himself master of the road outside the South Gate; in the capture of your Chiang-tung bridge he has stopped all ingress or egress by the West gate, and again the capture of Ch'i-wêng bridge has enabled him to entrench himself strongly outside the East gate, and by occupying all the lower available points he has cut off the supply of provisions. The minds of the people in the city are far from being tranquil, added to which the civilians are numerous, the old people, the small and the women are numerous, and the provisions consumed are excessive, whilst the funds are totally inadequate to meet the demand. If you do not adopt the measure I propose, complete extermination will assuredly take place." At the finish of this the Tienwang again poured out the vials of his indignation on me. Addressing me he said "I have received the commands of Shangti and Jesus to come down upon the earth and rule the empire. I am the sole Lord of ten thousand nations, and what should I fear? You are not asked for your opinion upon anything, and the government does not require your supervision. You can please yourself as to whether you leave the capital, or whether you wish to remain. The empire (hills and streams) I hold with an iron grasp, and if you do not support me there are those that will. You say 'there are no soldiers.' My heavenly troops are more numerous than the water (could contain.) What fear have I of the demon Tsêng? If you are afraid of death then you will die. The state matters do not concern you, but are in the hands of the Valiant King my second brother, and if, when the young Western King issues any orders, any one disobeys, such one is sure to be executed." As soon as he had finished his opprobrious speech I said to him. "Let me pray the Tienwang to kill me now, in order that I may escape injury at some future day. Not half a moment's leisure have I enjoyed during my period of service, and now because I bring to your notice the real state of affairs you revile me in this way. I am ready to yield up my life in your presence, as a free tribute to you and as an earnest of my zeal and loyalty in your cause." Even after I had said all this the chief was as reluctant as ever to give heed to my words, and, scarce restraining my tears, I quitted the palace gate.

The various ministers came and condoled with me, and the Tienwang, inwardly conscious of his fault, sent me a court dress on the following day in order to quiet my mind. I remained a month or more in the capital, and in the beginning of the 14th year (1864) proposed to leave the place. The Chief was afraid to let me depart, the popular mind was by no means settled, and the ministers in great grief begged that I might be retained in the city. The brethren and sisters hearing that I was about to leave came to me with tears in their eyes and entreated me not to go. With a view of meeting the general wish, I consented not to leave.

The calamities that have fallen on us to-day may all be attributed to the Tien-wang not taking my advice, but being so perverse, and whenever I had any thing to suggest, answering me that "heaven will settle everything without any occasion on your part to speculate or predict. You go and obey my dictum, reach Ch'ên-tê-ta'u's forces and sweep the north shore, and let me know when you have done this" and such like. The memorials I sent home did not reach the Chief, but were usually detained by some of the mischievous people around him, who endeavoured to hide all difficulties, and who, jealous of my influence, did everything they could to reduce my force, and by continuing in their unfair proceedings contributed in no small way to the final loss of Soochow, Hangchow and sundry other places.

Chin-hua and Lung-yu in Chekiang were taken by the Governor (now Viceroy) Tso-tsung-t'ang. Ningpo, which we had been, as is known, invited to take by the devils, was afterwards attacked by devils, whose minds had been lured on to do so by Imperialist money. The formidable nature of the foreign devils' guns unavoidably hitting their mark, enabled them to make a breach in the walls, and our troops being unable to maintain their stand retreated upon Yu-hang. After the devils had received their reward, for their success at Ningpo, they went on to Shao-hing, receiving further gains for this service. On the whole not a little money found its way into their pockets, or [purchases] they would not have taken our cities.

The troops at Chin-hua, Lung-yu, Yen-chow, Wen-chow and Tai-chow successively retired upon Fu-yang, which Li Futai attacked with a large force for several months without success, when the aid of devil soldiers was again invoked to operate by water. The place was bombarded by the devils, who had several engagements with us, but, being repulsed throughout, they brought up armaments to their assistance, and Tso Futai likewise increased his men, and this city ultimately fell. The devils having received their reward in hard cash for their capture of Fu-yang then returned to Ningpo. The defeated forces at Shao-hing and Sao-shan retired to Yu-hang where they entrenched themselves and threw up works. They were attacked incessantly by Governor Tso, and daily fights took place. Our object was to keep a firm hold on Yu-hang, as affording a guarantee for the safety and security of Hangchow. Governor Tso, with a naval and military force then proceeded on to Hangchow. One flank of his army resting on Yu-hang and the other on Chiu-lung (nine dragon) Hill, and extending its lines as far as the Thunder Peak Pagoda on the West Lake outside the Heng-shan gate, and connecting itself with the Yu-hang force. The whole of the army occupied 80 stockades, but as the number of hills and the quantity of water in the immediate vicinity rendered one camp equal to 10 [elsewhere], the 80 camps were able to cover or command an area of nearly 30 miles. Our heavenly troops had but ten or more redoubts from the West Lake to Yu-hang, and were mainly dependent on the surrounding water for their strength. The Chekiang capital was under the Ting-wang, Ch'ên-ping-wên, and Yu-hang was in charge of Wang-hai-yang. That Chekiang remained firm for so many months was owing to the aqueous state of the country around.*

Some time after the occurrences mentioned, the Soochow troops took the devils with them, and attacked Chu-p'oo, Ping-hu and Kia-shan. These three cities as well as Soochow, Tai-tsang, Kun-shan (Quin-san) and Wu-kiang (Wo-kong) were taken by Li Futai. The loss of Yu-hua-tai threw the city into great commotion, and the Chief would not allow me to go to Soochow or Hangchow; even though I memorialised him three or four times he would not grant my request. Yin-tai Hill fell after this, and the Tienwang sheweed still greater disinclination to let me depart, though Soochow and Hangchow were in great danger. Despatches daily arrived from these places recounting the danger, and once more did I attempt to devise means for getting away. Ultimately the Chief and his councillors agreed to my leaving, provided I would first contribute 100,000 taels to the commissariat fund. This of course I consented to do, and sold the trinkets and jewellery of my family to meet the required demand. The Tienwang allowed me 40 days in which to return, announced to me at the time "if the amount required is not forthcoming or if you fail to return within the prescribed period, the law must take its due course."

The critical state of affairs outside made me willing to consent to the arrangement, and all I wanted was to get clear of the city and then mature my plans. Shortly after I left, the Kao-chiao gate was taken by General Tsêng, and the defeat here caused the Fu-wang Yang-fu-ch'ang to fly to Tung-pa, and the Shih-wang, Li-shih-sien to fall back on Li-yang. I was now at Soochow, and engaged in daily indecisive combats with the foreign devils, each side being unable to attain its aim. I then led my men through the Ch'ang-mên (great west gate) to Ma-t'ang-ch'iao in the endeavour to execute some stratagem outside for the temporary protection of the city, while I could carry out the contemplated plan (of my own) of repairing to the capital and advising the Tienwang to relinquish Nanking for some other retreat.

* It is a pity that the Tienwang did not express himself in a happier way by comparing the numbers of his men to the stars, and not to the water, as the latter is not numerous and means nothing at all. Water being mentioned has necessitated the addition of the two words in brackets.

H. B. M. CONSULAR COURT.

OWNERS OF Her Majesty, v. DADABHOY & Co.

January 24th, 1865.

The parties to this suit had agreed, by a charter-party dated Sept. 14th 1864, that the ship Her Majesty should take on board at Shanghai a cargo of cotton or other merchandise, and thereupon proceed to London or Liverpool as ordered by the charterers; the ship to have a lien on cargo for freight £3.10 per ton of 50 cubic feet. Seventy working days to be allowed, and demurrage beyond that time to be paid by the charterers at the rate of $80 a day. The plaintiffs had done every thing to entitle them to have the cargo on board the ship; but the defendants had not fulfilled their agreement, and the plaintiffs claimed £6,500 in consequence.

The defendants replied that the time allowed for the loading of the vessel had not elapsed, and that the plaintiffs had wrongfully refused to receive cargo tendered by the defendants in pursuance of the agreement which they had concluded between them. The plaintiffs had thus discharged defendants from the performance of the charter-party.

Mr. MYBURGH, in opening the case for the plaintiffs, said that this was an action for breach of charter-party in not loading the ship Her Majesty after she had been detained a reasonable time on demurrage. By the charter-party, seventy working days were allowed for loading the ship. The time allowed the charterers to detain the ship on demurrage was not fixed by the charter-party. It was a well-known rule in law that when such an agreement as a charter-party is silent as to time, the law will imply that a reasonable time should be allowed. The plaintiff gave notice to the defendants, previous to the expiration of the lay-days, that he would not remain on demurrage for more than fifteen days, and also called the attention of the defendants to the fact that the loading of the ship had not commenced. At the expiration of the fifteen days the defendants received notice that, as the ship Her Majesty had been detained a reasonable time on demurrage and the loading had not commenced, they would be held liable for breach of charter-party. The questions for the Court to decide were, whether the plaintiff was entitled to sue the defendants for breach of charter-party on the 31st December when the plaint was filed, and, secondly, what was the amount of damages to which the plaintiff was entitled.

G. P. SEYMOUR said:—I am master of the ship Her Majesty. Her register tonnage is 1,112 Tons, and she will carry not less than 1,800 tons of measurement cargo. On the 14th September I made this charter-party with Messrs. Dadabhoy & Co. lay-days commenced 25 hours after written notice was given to the charterers that the vessel was ready to receive cargo. I gave notice on the 17th through Messrs. Gibb Livingston & Co. that lay-days commenced on the 16th. [Defendant admitted that lay-days expired on the 8th December, agreed to by both parties.] A week before the lay-days expired I wrote through Gibb, Livingston & Co. to defendants, to remind them how nearly the lay-days had expired, and to ask then what they intended to do as there was not a single package on board up to that time. On the 8th December, I wrote again stating that the lay-days had expired and I should then claim for demurrage from ten to fifteen days. At the expiration of 15 days they had not commenced to load the ship. They had not on the 31st December when this action was commenced. Six days after this Dadabhoy & Co. sent 100 bales of compressed cotton alongside. I declined to receive it on board and wrote this letter. (Letter read) This is the letter I refer to in the one just read, written by Mr. Myburgh, my lawyer, to Mr. Cooper (letter read.) This is Mr. Cooper's reply (letter read). The day before I refused to receive the 100 bales on board, I consul. the letter I hand in to be written to Dadabhoy & Co., declining to receive further amounts in payment of demurrage. I hand in Dadabhoy & Co.'s reply (letters read). While the working days were running, I have had conversations with Mr. Burjorjee of Dadabhoy & Co. on the subject of the charter-party. He asked me in his office what I would cancel the charter-party for. This occurred a week preceding the 21st November. This letter embodies the result of our conversations (letter read). The offer that I should go to Calcutta to load with rice amounted to an offer of $4.10 per bag. I declined it as unremunerative. They had previously offered to cancel the contract on payment of $ 2,000 which I also declined. I received no answer to my letter of 21st November, but after a conversation on the 7th December, Dadabhoy & Co. wrote me this letter on that day, to which I replied on the 9th December. (Letters read) The offer of £2,250 to cancel the contract was made by me about the 19th November. The offer to re-charter was made at the same time as the 21st lay-days. There were then about 12 lay-days of the old charter to run. They made me this offer which I accepted, but it was afterwards withdrawn by Dadabhoy & Co. In consequence of the defendants not loading my ship as per charter-party, I estimate my loss at £5,000. This is a statement of my estimate of loss. We chartered the ship at £16,500—not less. The net earnings of the ship from August 1862 to 1863 were about £5,000. The gross earnings were between £12,000 and £13,000.

TO THE COURT:—I cannot tell the net earnings in the succeeding year.

TO MR. MYBURGH:—To my knowledge all the items (as to working expenses &c.) stated in the account (note in court) are correct. My charter-party does not state the number of days my ship should be detained on demurrage. I should certainly not have agreed to over fifteen lay-days. In this ship I have been detained only once on demurrage. I was then detained for about five days. Demurrage of $80 a day only pays my actual expenses. I have a crew of forty Europeans. I never consented in writing, or verbally, to any alteration in the terms of the charter-party. I did not discharge the defendant from loading the ship in the number of days mentioned in the charter-party. I consider ten to fifteen days a reasonable time to be detained on demurrage. To the best of my knowledge I have never signed a charter-party for more than ten days on demurrage. I have been captain for 12 years and during this time have signed several charter-parties.

TO MR. COOPER:—When a ship is under demurrage according to a charter-party, she is under the charter-party up to a reasonable time. I received demurrage under my charter-party up to the 6th January. The amount stipulated in the charter-party was paid to that date. I received the money in order to reimburse my owners for the expenses of the ship during her detention. After fifteen days under demurrage, I did not consider the ship at the service of the charterers. I believe I gave the charterers notice before the 6th January that the charter-party was at an end, (a letter written to the defendants by Mr. Myburgh to that effect, on the part of Captain Seymour, on the 24th December, was handed in and read). I am not aware that any notice was given to the charterers before Jan. 6th, that demurrage would not be received. On 6th Jan. before the cotton came alongside, I gave notice to my agents that demurrage would not be received. I did not give notice to Dadabhoy & Co. I would not have received demurrage after the 15th day (23rd), but for the advice of my agents to do so. I left it to them. I did not consider that as long as I received demurrage I was bound to receive cargo. I declined to receive the demurrage because I did not think it sufficient to pay the expenses of the ship. I consider that when a vessel receives demurrage she is bound to receive her cargo. I received demurrage on the 6th, but it was not by my consent. I only learned last Saturday that demurrage had been received on the 6th. I did not apply to Gibb, Livingston & Co. to enquire why they did not obey my injunctions, I believe the Sailor's Home has been longer on demurrage than I have been, but she had a considerable portion of her cargo on board before the lay-days had expired. I wanted £120 per day demurrage, and 1,000 bales of cotton as a guarantee. The current rate for freight is now £2.10 I believe. I considered the charter-party at an end after the 15th day when action was commenced. In any event I think my notice of the 6th put an end to the charter-party. Gibb, Livingston & Co. have shewn me the correspondence between themselves and Dadabhoy & Co. During my last charter-party I received demurrage at Calcutta. I received 100 rupees a day and port expenses were paid. I don't know the amount of the port expenses. My vessel is 8 years old. Her original cost was between £30,000 and £40,000. She was built in Calcutta. Freights are stiffening now in Shanghai I believe.

TO MR. MYBURGH:—My object in coming into court is merely to sue for the actual expenses incurred by the delay. Dadabhoy & Co. wanted me to sign bills of lading for cotton before it was received. They said that if I did not sign the bills of lading they were afraid they would not be able to give me cotton. This was on or about the 20th October. It was about a month after that they made offers for cancelling the charter-party. I did not sign these bills of lading. If they had kept the vessel at work every day she would have been laden in three weeks. I don't know for how much the bills of lading were made out. From the time of notice of action, I would not have received any more cotton on board. I considered the charter-party at an end on that day.

TO THE COURT:—I first instructed Gibb, Livingston & Co. not to receive demurrage on the 6th; I had a conversation with them on the subject previously, and they told me that lay-days commenced on the 16th. [Defendant admitted that lay-days expired on the 8th December, agreed to by both parties.] A week before the lay-days expired I wrote through Gibb, Livingston & Co. to defendants, to remind them how nearly the lay-days had expired, and to ask them

THE AIR-CHAMBER HAT.—In an action tried in the month of June last, Messrs. Ellwood established the validity of their Patent in the Court of Common Pleas. In November, a Rule Nisi, which had been obtained by the Defendants, Messrs. Christy, to set aside the verdict was discharged, the Lord Chief Justice considering that the Plaintiffs had made out a very strong case, that it was clearly a matter for the jury, and he did not think he should be doing justice according to law if he deprived the Plaintiffs of the verdict. The other learned judges concurred, and one of them stated that had he been on the jury he should have delivered the same verdict.

DISH.

Extract of a Letter from a medical gentleman at Madras to his brother at Worcester, May, 1851.

"Tell Lea and Perrins that their sauce is highly esteemed in India, and is, in my opinion, the most palatable as well as the most wholesome sauce that is made.

CAUTION.

LEA AND PERRINS

Beg to caution the public against spurious imitations of their celebrated

WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE.

L. & P. have discovered that several of the Foreign Markets have been supplied with SPURIOUS IMITATIONS, the labels closely resembling those of the genuine Sauce, and in one or more instances the name of L. and P. forged.

L. and P. will proceed against any one who may manufacture or vend such imitations, and have instructed their correspondents in the various parts of the world, to advise them of any infringement of their rights.
